

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

This invention provides methods by which repetitive elements can be selectively removed from genomic libraries made from complex eukaryotic genomes. In particular, the invention relates to affecting the efficiency of recovery of novel genes and regulatory sequences, by use of methylation restrictive bacteria, cell-free enzymes, and methyl-binding proteins.